Climate resilience is the capacity for a socio ecological system to: absorb stresses and maintain function in the face of external stresses imposed upon it by climate change and adapt, reorganize, and evolve into more desirable configurations that improve the sustainability of the system, leaving it better prepared for future climate change impacts.

Social resilience is defined as the ability of a human community to cope with and adapt to stresses such as social, political, environmental, or economic change.

Cultural resilience considers how cultural background (i.e., culture, cultural values, language, customs, norms) helps individuals and communities overcome adversity.

Disaster resilience is the ability of individuals, communities, organizations and states to adapt to and recover from hazards, shocks or stresses without compromising long-term prospects for development.

Resilient Heritage collaborates at the crossroads between and among arts, culture, and learning from setbacks can empower kids with learning and attention issues. It can help them build self-awareness and self-advocacy skills. It can also help them develop new strategies and tools for solving problems. And it can boost their motivation and self-esteem.

Resilient Education

Resilient Heritage

Resilient people develop a mental capacity that allows them to adapt with ease during adversity, bending like bamboo instead of breaking. They possess a set of powerful traits.

Learning from setbacks can empower kids with learning and attention issues. It can help them build self-awareness and self-advocacy skills. It can also help them develop new strategies and tools for solving problems. And it can boost their motivation and self-esteem.
Even if world is not agree, still we together can do a tangible impact.

We, ARCHITECTS as decision makers & who take lead roles & who are making an impact to our built fabric, our responsibility is to do some tangible work to the society, country and the region and to the world with less impact to the environment.

certainly we can do a tangible impact.

Let’s see how to formulate ACSR strategies...
